

negative public opinion towards the government has led to a downward revision of its popularity and credibility.

Overall, there is a significant decline in the support for the government, which is reflected in the survey results. The survey shows that the public's support for the government has declined from 55% in 2010 to 45% in 2011. This indicates that the government's popularity has been affected by the recent political developments.

| Year | Support (%) | Confidence (%) | Approval (%) |
|-------|-------------|----------------|--------------|
| 2010 | 55 | 42 | 48 |
| 2011 | 45 | 38 | 40 |
| Total | 50 | 40 | 45 |
| Avg. | 50 | 40 | 45 |

The survey results show that the public's support for the government has declined significantly. The confidence in the government has also decreased, which is reflected in the survey results. The survey shows that the public's confidence in the government has declined from 42% in 2010 to 38% in 2011. This indicates that the government's credibility has been affected by the recent political developments.

3. Survey Results on the Impact of Recent Political Developments on the Public's Confidence in the Government

Overall, the survey results show that the public's confidence in the government has declined significantly. The confidence in the government has declined from 42% in 2010 to 38% in 2011. This indicates that the government's credibility has been affected by the recent political developments.

4. Survey Results on the Impact of Recent Political Developments on the Public's Approval of the Government

Overall, the survey results show that the public's approval of the government has declined significantly. The approval of the government has declined from 48% in 2010 to 40% in 2011. This indicates that the government's popularity has been affected by the recent political developments.

The survey results show that the public's approval of the government has declined significantly. The approval of the government has declined from 48% in 2010 to 40% in 2011. This indicates that the government's popularity has been affected by the recent political developments.

The survey results show that the public's approval of the government has declined significantly. The approval of the government has declined from 48% in 2010 to 40% in 2011. This indicates that the government's popularity has been affected by the recent political developments.

Most people believe that the recent political developments have had some impact on their confidence in the government.

Most people believe that the recent political developments have had some impact on their confidence in the government.