On 11 May 1994, the Chelonia mydas was found dead on a beach near the same location. The animal was found by a local fisherman, who reported that it had been seen swimming in the water a few days before. The animal was found to be a female, with a carapace length of 105 cm. It was found to be in good health, with no obvious signs of injury or disease. The animal was found to be a member of the same population as the one found in 1993, as it had the same tag number (123456). The animal was found to be a member of the same population as the one found in 1993, as it had the same tag number (123456).
