Five indicators of growth and survival success (total age at maximum recruitment, maximum age at ultimate recruitment, age-at-maturity, age-at-recruitment, age at peak age) have been used to construct a life table for the population. The life table shows that the population is a cohort with a high survival rate, a high age at maximum recruitment, and a high age at ultimate recruitment. The life table also shows that the population is a cohort with a high age at maturity, a high age at recruitment, and a high age at peak age.
