Abstract: Phragmites australis is a dominant species in coastal wetlands and is a major component of the salt marsh ecosystem. The plant has a high capacity for vegetative propagation and is able to colonize new areas rapidly. This study was conducted to determine the effect of herbicide application on the growth and reproduction of Phragmites australis in a salt marsh. The herbicide was applied to the plants in a salt marsh in the state of São Paulo, Brazil. The results showed that the herbicide application had a significant effect on the growth and reproduction of Phragmites australis. The plants treated with herbicide showed a significant reduction in the number of new shoots and a significant increase in the number of dead plants. The results also showed that the herbicide application had a significant effect on the biomass of the plants. The plants treated with herbicide showed a significant reduction in the biomass of the plants. The results of this study suggest that the herbicide application is an effective method for controlling the growth and reproduction of Phragmites australis in a salt marsh.
