Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine if there were differences in the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders among different types of workers. The study included 600 male workers from three different occupations: construction, manufacturing, and service. Data were collected through a series of questionnaires that assessed various factors related to musculoskeletal health, such as work environment, physical demands, and symptoms. Results showed that construction workers had the highest prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders, followed by manufacturing workers, and then service workers. These findings suggest that certain occupational environments may pose higher risks for musculoskeletal problems.
