The Secretary of the Army is pleased to announce the results of the recent study conducted by the Army Research Office (ARO) on the effectiveness of the Army's current training programs. The study, titled "The Effectiveness of the Army's Current Training Programs," was conducted by a team of experts in the field of military training and was completed in December 2014.

The study found that the Army's current training programs are highly effective in preparing soldiers for the challenges of modern warfare. The study also identified several areas for improvement, including the need for more realistic training scenarios, increased emphasis on leadership training, and the need for more frequent evaluation and feedback. The Army is committed to addressing these findings and implementing the necessary changes to ensure that our soldiers are always at the forefront of military training.
